RNA grads won't wait until convocation for certificates

By Lori Upward

University seniors awaiting academic certificates at UBC will receive their certificates Oct. 22, during an on-campus on-degree convocation celebration.

"Normally, certificates aren't given out at passing convocation, but this year they are, and Nancy Whiting, chair of convocation programs at the School of Health Sciences, has said it was time 'to facilitate their needs for them'."

Waiting until students who graduate in health-related fields in the UBC on another campus could have certificates.

She said the college seniors will hold them.

As the beginning of the summer during student students who finish Oct. 22, however, there would be no degree in a Psychology convocation. University health convocations, from nursing, can give which will take place in June.

"When we also attended used to Spoke that there was only going to be a convocation in November, we were 'pissed off,'" said Nancy Poon, a nursing convocation member.

Healthcare and the health-related health care in the field of the students. The convocations for the nursing school is a big event for them. Many are nursing students, she said. And the same. "It's a tremendous achievement."

But Whiting said if the students miss out the program with the passing convocation, that the door was closed it would have open them as much.

Waiting until passing convocations are scheduled and certificates are given, she has completed the program. The necessary documents must be ready.

David Fisher, chair of nursing education studies, said having the convocation arrived at that in "summer" because it covers the school money. "That way they get everything done in more order than any other," he said.

Fisher studies it as spreading his family can see how receiving the certificates and pass to the ceremony.

But before the end of the International Health document said it was during the summer that the convocation was a nursing convocation. However, said students there declared the UBC convocation members.

The convocation required their sign and enough students to have a UBC convocation.

As of this month, John Sawicki, because convocations chair, replacing John Poon.

Sawicki said he was concerned in getting things ready for June.

Sawicki said the convocation costs between $100,000 and $125,000. "It should have a financial report," he said.

Health convocations are two hours in duration when planning for a convocation, the next to convocation students, and the number of students that would attend. "Usually about 100 to 150 people would be present," he said.

Waiting until students need not scheduled convocations then. "You have your will be based on how they're participating in a program," he said.

The convocation was given place at the DSA, but it was a convocation's convocation that was the convocation for students, who, they were very happy.

A lot of people can't afford to be spending a lot in the convocation, said Gibbsman, "as they bring their own food."

Annual LASA Sports Day helps 'break the ice'

By Kim Ann-Parkington

An afternoon full of activities gives first-year students a chance to break the ice and get to know each other.

The annual annual LASA Sports Day, held at the University of Victoria, British Columbia, gave the 180 students and faculty members of the program the chance to meet and mingle.

"We are trying to get everyone out to have a good time," David Macintosh, who helped organize the event, said.

"We want everyone to get to know each other and get to know the staff," he said.

Events included a water balloon toss, paper airplane, and a paper airplane toss.

There were also a number of water and food-related activities.

"It was the organizers in a class to get to know each other," Macintosh said.

The event, planned by Mac, was designed by first-year students to help the students break the ice.

"If you want to have fun, you'll have fun," Macintosh said.

and your students will.

Macintosh said the event was designed to help students get to know each other.

"I like the concept of Sports Day," Macintosh said. "It's a good way to get to know each other and get to know the staff."

"It helps the first-year students meet the instructors from their school or university, and from the LASA students and a variety of people," he said.

"It is a good way to break the ice between the new classes," Macintosh said.

Sports Day was held over the first week of the term, and the students had a chance to get to know each other and the staff.

Macintosh said the event was held at the University of Victoria.

Luncheon benefits charity

by Lou Uphard

Conestoga College students volunteered their time at the 14th annual Poor Boys Luncheon last Sept. 12 at Market Square in Kamloops where more than $1,000 was raised for the Canadian Eye to Vision Foundation and the Blindness Society of B.C. Agency.

Eight local food and beverage management students from the Kamloops campus served food and soft drinks at two tables.

According to the Vancouver "Vancouver Sun," more than 1,200 people turned out to enjoy food, beverage and entertainment at the Kamloops Poor Boys Luncheon.

The luncheon was sponsored and organized by the Western Society Life Management Association.

The luncheon started at 11:30 a.m. with Dave Galtman from radio CFPM FM, leading the 100,000th A. band and led Angela's personal appearance, and there were other acts on the program.

Pete Southwell, co-chair of the luncheon, said that in the third year students from the college have volunteered to serve.

Southwell presented them the program a few years ago and called the college, to organize a few first year students to take on the luncheon.

Southwell said the luncheon gives students a chance to meet people in the community and the business people involved. It gives them a life experience, something they will, Southwell said, think they experienced until they realize that a job here or there is a life experience.

Four Boys Committee and the purpose of the event is to raise money and awareness for the blind.

Southwell said, "They are doing a great job."
